Summer Bee-havior

Noticing different activity
from your honeybees?
Does it look something like...

Bee Bearding

Bearding is a natural behavior in honeybees. They cluster together on the outside of their hive, resembling a “beard.”

This activity occurs during temperature regulation. Honeybees maintain an internal hive temperature of 96°F year-round. To ensure it’s never hotter inside, a portion of the colony “beards” on the front, while other worker bees gather and drop water insider, fanning their wings to generate evaporative cooling.

Similar to scrubbing clothes on a washboard, worker bees stand on their 2nd & 3rd pair of legs, bend down, and rock back and forth while scrubbing the hive’s surface.

The purpose is still a mystery, but experts theorize it could be a form of scent marking, cleaning, or idle behavior when the team is on top of their duties.
